1. Introduction

This course aims to introduce American politics (political system and policy making). In order to explain the policy making process in the United States, this course focuses on constitutional foundations, political behavior, and institutions. Additionally, some policies and policy making processes are examined. We also discuss American politics in the perspective of comparative politics.

* Regarding constitutional foundations, we will address the questions: What are the constitutional foundations? How do the foundations shape American politics and policy making?

* Regarding political behavior, we will mainly explore the following question: What factors affect political behavior including public opinion and voting behavior?

* Regarding institutions, this course examines the presidency and Congress.

* Regarding public policies, we will discuss economic, social, and foreign policies.

11. Other items of notification

Class attendance can be a part of your grade (participation). I highly recommend you to attend all class meetings. If students miss a certain number of the class meetings, no grade will be reported (F). Please check the university rules. Students are responsible for any problems (e.g. missing homework assignments and tests) caused by missing classes (except the university acceptable excuses). Also, note that I may deal with some materials that are not in the reading materials in class. Students who want reevaluation of their exams or assignments should submit a written (typed) request within a week following the date the exams/assignments are returned. No electronic device is allowed in class. No cellular phone! No laptop computer!
